A native of the Bronx, James J. Periconi is a (nearly) life-long New Yorker, a graduate of Regis High School and Columbia University (B.A., 1970). In 1972, as a Danforth Graduate Fellow, he received an M.A. in English and Comparative Literature from the University of Virginia. He received his J.D. from New York University School of Law in 1977. He practices environmental law in Manhattan.

In 2000, Mr. Periconi co-authored, with Professor Fred Gardaphé, the Italian American Writers Association Bibliography of the Italian American Book. He has exhibited his extensive collection of Italian-language U.S. books in a first-of-its-kind exhibition at the Grolier Club of New York in the fall of 2012, for which his extensive catalogue, now available in a paperback edition (Bordighera Press), received extensive praise from the bibliographic and book-history academic world, as well as from scholars of Italian America. He is also the bibliographic editor of the translation of Francesco Durante’s monumental Italoamericana (Fordham University Press, Spring, 2014).
